

Who is Destroying America?
By Allan C. Stover

Who is Destroying America? is as controversial and frightening as a book can get. It contains updated columns from my online columns for the former ToogoodReports and others that were unpublished when the website closed down. It covers topics that concern most Americans, including Islamic terrorists, illegal immigration, our porous border, criminals, the United Nations, religion in America, the ACLU, the liberal agenda for America, abortion, our liberal courts, drugs, gun control, politicians, public prayer, reverse racism, the liberal media, and the decline of morals in America, among others. It's guaranteed to get you riled up.

A number of events in my life inspired me to write the material in this book. The major even occurred during the Goldwater election of 1964. One major newspaper and the three networks had provided all of the news and commentary possible where I lived. My opinions often clashed with those I read and hear, and I wondered whether something were wrong with me for swimming "upstream against the mainstream of America," or at least what the media then led us to believe was the mainstream. I heard Goldwater speak for about 45 seconds on TV one evening and was awestruck by what I heard. He spoke of things I hadn't read or heard in the media, about God and freedom and limited government and traditional values and the American Way. I realized then that I'd been propagandized to believe there was only one side every issue.

Later, my company assigned me to the Philippines, and I was there when Ferdinand Marcos declared martial law and established a dictatorship. What made such an impact on me was how so many—Filipinos, Americans, and others alike—had accepted the dictatorship, even welcomed it, believing that a strong government would bring needed reforms. Too late, we realized that he was worse than the evils he promised (but failed) to reform.

In 2001, I had a small chance to spread the word when my novel, The Evil Ones, was published. This novel was a story of good versus evil, the evil ones being those who are working to destroy America. I've always hoped that those who read the novel would begin helping in their own small way to slow the destruction of our beloved country.

In 2002, I was asked to write a weekly column for the popular conservative Christian website, The Toogood Reports. This book contains my columns, brought up-to-date, and some that weren't published before the website closed because of the deteriorating health of the editor's wife.

Yes, there are people working to destroy our country for their own evil reasons, but the most prevalent is their desire to reduce our nation to a province of a one-world government. We must pass this message on to other Americans and encourage them to also pass the word. Our future and the future of our children and grandchildren depend on us.

Here are three sample chapters from the book:

REMEMBERING THE SLAUGHTER OF 9/11

Have you forgotten how it felt that day

To see your homeland under fire

And her people blown away?

Have you forgotten when those towers fell?

We had neighbors still inside

Going through a living hell...

“Have You Forgotten?” Darryl Worley/Wynn Varble.

It’s been almost four years since the carnage of 9/11. Only on the anniversary do we remember—at least for a day or so—the slaughter of 3,000 innocent people by Satan’s warriors on Earth. Too many Americans have forgotten the bloody lessons of that day.

On September 11, 2001, I was working in Saudi Arabia—home of 15 of the 19 hijackers—and had just returned from a shopping trip when an American friend called. “Turn on the TV, “ he shouted. “They’re attacking us.”

They sure were. All evening, I watched on satellite TV as United Airlines flight 175 crashed into the South Tower again and again in fiery instant replay. I saw the towers collapse, crushing and burning to death innocent workers, firemen, and police officers. I saw the Pentagon in flames, where military and civilian workers had died a horrible death. I heard reports of a plane crashing in Pennsylvania.

Those memories should be seared into our memories. If Americans forget that bloodthirsty Islamist barbarians have thrust a war upon us, a war in which thousands of our fellow Americans have already suffered and died, we will lose our resolve to prevail until victory.

Some of the 3,000 tragic stories that day deserve repeating, even though our mainstream media refuse to do so. A woman in the North Tower learned from her doctor that morning that she was pregnant. She called her husband to tell him the exciting news. While she was on the phone, Islamist savage Mohammed Atta flew American Airlines flight 11 with 92 innocent people on board into a lower floor. She and the baby growing within her perished that day.

Another young lady from out of town was attending a meeting in the same building when Mohammed Atta crashed into the building below her. The smoke and flames trapped her in the upper floors of the building. She left a message on her husband's answering machine. Her voice trembled with fear as she told him the building was on fire and she was trapped. She soon died, either from smoke inhalation or jumping from the building to escape the flames and smoke.

She may have been alive when another Islamist savage, Marwan al-Shehhi, crashed United Airlines flight 175 into the South Tower. She was probably dead when the South Tower collapsed an hour later, but if she wasn't, the North Tower soon collapsed, killing those inside.

A man on an upper floor in the North Tower had a visitor in the lobby before the attacks. He usually sent his secretary down to sign in visitors, but she was eight months pregnant, so he decided to go himself. He arrived at the lobby just before the plane struck. He survived; she and her unborn child didn't.

Two-year-old Christine Hanson was a passenger on al-Shehhi's Flight 175 with her parents. Little Christine was burned alive in the explosion of the jet fuel. Hopefully, the end was quick and she felt no pain.

My name is Christine Hanson,

I am only two years old.
We were going for a plane ride.
That's what we were told.
I'll never go to prom
I won't reach the age of three.
Why did this happen to these people?
Why did this happen to me?

Author unknown

(Complete poem at <http://www.truthorfiction.com/rumors/c/christinehanson.htm>)

Pictures and video on the Internet show the planes crashing, the buildings burning and collapsing, and the victims jumping. Our liberal media hide the images, fearful that they'll remind us of the savagery, and we'll demand revenge or profile or become insensitive toward a "religion of peace" or—gasp!—reelect George W. Bush. (Too late, guys.)

*They took all the footage off my T.V.
Said it's too disturbing for you and me
It'll just breed anger that's what the experts say
If it was up to me I'd show it every day*

“Have You Forgotten?” by Darryl Worley and Wynn Varble

Americans have a short attention span. The cruel, violent deaths of some 3,000 innocent people form a distant memory for most of us. Sadly, those weren't the first deaths in the Islamist war on America. The Islamist barbarians declared war on Western Civilization in the 1970's and have attacked us worldwide ever since. We've missed lesson after lesson on the Islamist threat. The main lesson: They're in it for the long haul. Their madrasas are teaching Muslim children the glories of jihad and the murder of infidels. They want their children to grow up to murder our children.

Few Americans comprehend that we're fighting a worldwide war in which Iraq and Afghanistan are but two of the battlefields. We discuss irrelevant issues to death as though the war can be settled in a high school debate. The only real issues are how to kill all of our suicidal enemies and how to protect America and its future.

People ask me whether we should abandon Israel, as though Islamists would stop the attacks if we did. Islamists (and too many “moderate” Muslims) mean to conquer the world and convert it into a Taliban-Islamofascist one-world caliphate. They believe that their religion ordains the use of deadly force to accomplish that goal. They mean to kill or enslave us all.

Some of those barbarians live in America and other Western nations. Islamic scholar Daniel Pipes noted, “Militant Islam, with its West-phobia and goal of world hegemony, dominates Islam in the West and appears to many to be the only kind of Islam.”

The Qu'ran contains verses that are peaceful towards Christians and Jews, and others that advocate attacking all unbelievers. The apologists who want you to believe Islam is a "religion of peace" quote the peaceful verses. The Islamists ignore those verses and receive their inspiration from the murderous ones.

We interrupted their war against us when we attacked Afghanistan. When we conquered Iraq, we sent a strong message to leaders of rogue nations (not "nations of concern," as namby-pamby Madeline Albright, Clinton's Secretary of State) called them): Call off the terrorists or we will destroy you as we did the governments of Iraq and Afghanistan. Libya has heeded the warning; Iran and Syria still tread on dangerous ground.

We have driven a military wedge into the Middle East and sent our enemies there into disarray. Our troops are fighting our enemies there instead of here. Only our resolve can keep it that way. We must never forget what Islamists did to us—and what they will do to us if we give them the chance. The memories will keep us strong. And keep us free.

WILL WE FIGHT CIVIL WAR II OVER THE SOUTHWEST U. S.?

America is in danger of being torn apart in a second civil war. Every schoolchild knows (or at least they once knew, before education became more indoctrination and political correctness than learning) that our bloody Civil War was fought because the Confederate States wanted to secede from the Union. Our Pledge of Allegiance reminds us that we are one indivisible nation.

All of that could change. For years, there has been a serious movement among Mexicans and Americans of Mexican descent to take over the Southwest and turn it into a state of Mexico or an independent nation. The region, merged with northern Mexican provinces in one version and with all of Mexico in another, is called Aztlán, after the mythical birthplace of the Aztecs, or La Republica del Norte—Republic of the North. Activist Charles Truxillo, Professor of Chicano Studies at the University of New Mexico, said the new nation would include California, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, and southern Colorado. In an Associated Press report, Truxillo said the new nation should be established “by any means necessary.”

Another activist, Armando Navarro, Professor of Ethnic Studies, University of California, Riverside, in a speech to Chicano activists, said that those young people “are really going to be in a position to really make the promise of what the Chicano movement was all about in terms of self-determination, in terms of empowerment, and even in the terms of the idea of an Aztlán!”

The website In Search of Aztlán says, “economic control of our lives and our communities can only come about by driving the exploiter out of our communities, our pueblos, and our lands.” The exploiter, of course, is non-Hispanic America. “Lands rightfully ours will be fought for and defended.”

They also want money, “Restitution for past economic slavery, political exploitation, ethnic, cultural and psychological destruction and denial of civil and human rights.” So we now have the Hispanic version of reparations. “For the very young there will no longer be acts of juvenile delinquency, but revolutionary acts.” Mug an elderly white lady and become a revolutionary?

Chicanos already have their own nation within our nation. Maria Hsia Chang, Professor of Political Science, University of Nevada, Reno, noted in her paper, Multiculturalism, Immigration and Aztlan: “Today, there are reasons to believe that Chicanos as a group are unlike previous immigrants in that they are more likely to remain unassimilated and unintegrated, whether by choice or circumstance—resulting in the formation of a separate quasi-nation within the United States.”

The website La Voz de Aztlan noted the similarities between their people, whom they call La Raza, and Palestinians. “The primary one of course is the fact that both La Raza and the Palestinians have been displaced by invaders that have utilized military means to conquer and occupy our territories. The takeover of our respective lands by foreign elements occurred 100 years apart.” The American lands at the time were populated 80-90% by American settlers and until then ignored by the Mexican government.

Aztlan is more than an idle threat from a few crackpots. Los Angeles mayor Antonio Villaraigosa and former Lt. Governor Cruz Bustamante have been quoted prominently on separatist websites. Young Hispanics are becoming increasingly radicalized, and the idea of creating their own Hispanic nation inspires them to join the movement.

Former Los Angeles Mayor James Hahn once told Vicente Fox, Mexico's President at the time, “Our city is a Mexican city.” Those were sweet words to Aztlan activists, who consider Los Angeles the capital city of Aztlan. Mario Obledo, former California secretary of health and welfare and co-founder of the Mexican-American Legal Defense Fund, stated publicly, “California is going to be a Hispanic state, and anyone who doesn't like it should leave.” Obledo also predicted that Hispanics would soon be a majority in California, a possibility considering the rate of illegal immigration.

The flow of a million illegal immigrants (no, not “undocumented workers”) each year into the U. S. provides more and more advocates. Most legal and illegal immigrants come from Mexico. A Zogby poll commissioned by Americans for Immigration Control (www.immigrationcontrol.com) found that almost sixty percent of Mexicans believe the Southwest United States belongs to Mexico. Fifty-seven percent said that Mexicans have the right to cross the border into the U. S. without permission. The Federation for American Immigration Reform (www.fairus.org) quotes Census Bureau statistics that we will have 400 million people living in America by 2050, the increase completely due to immigration. By then, we will have a Hispanic Southwest. That’s why activists fight initiatives for English in the schools, and why they promote Spanish classrooms (camouflaged under the name “bilingual education”), and why they fight for unrestricted immigration. They need more foot soldiers.

Americans have tried to fight back. Californians voted overwhelmingly for Proposition 187 denying government services to illegal aliens. Art Torres, chairman of the California Democratic Party, responded: “Proposition 187 was the last gasp of white America in California.” It wasn’t much of a gasp. A federal judge and a leftist governor effectively killed it.

What will the United States do if a restive Hispanic majority in the Southwest United States takes action to secede? The secessionists have compared themselves to Palestinians, so we could find ourselves under siege as the Israelis are now. Although Professor Truxillo doubts that civil war would be necessary, he didn't dismiss the idea. Another civil war is what we would have if we refused to surrender those states to Aztlan or La Republica del Norte or whatever they call it. It's either that or give a part of America away as readily as Jimmy Carter gave away the Panama Canal.

ISRAEL GETS REVENGE: A LESSON IN THE WAR ON TERROR

"Vengeance is mine; I will repay, sayeth the Lord."

Romans 12:19

In April, 1983, a truck bomb carrying 2,000 pounds of explosives exploded outside the U. S. Embassy in Beirut, Lebanon, killing 63 people, among them 17 Americans. An Islamic group claimed responsibility. Six months later, a truck loaded with explosives crashed into the U. S. Marine barracks in Beirut, killing 241 Americans. Across town, another blast killed 58 French soldiers. President Ronald Reagan noted that the troops, "died as they slept, resting from the duties of trying to keep peace in Lebanon." He later said of terrorists: "You can run, but you can't hide."

But the perpetrators of the Beirut attacks did run, and they did hide, and they're still free. Those savages got away with murder, killing 258 good Americans and a lot of allies and innocent civilians.

Rewind to another attack eleven years earlier. At the Olympic games in Munich, Germany in 1972, eight members of Black September, a violent arm of the Palestine Liberation Organization, killed two Israeli athletes and took nine others hostage in Olympic Village. The tragedy unfolded on international television, and the world looked on in confusion and horror. The terrorists demanded a plane for their escape to Egypt. At a shootout at the airport, the terrorists killed all nine hostages. German Army sharpshooters killed five terrorists and wounded three. Within weeks, the cowardly German authorities caved in to threats from PLO leaders and released the three terrorists.

Did the Israeli government simply announce that those involved could “run but not hide,” then allow them to continue on their merry terrorist ways, as we did? It could have been so. The day after the attack, the widow of a victim flew to Munich and said, “Somebody has to pay a price. Because it cannot be that people can terrorize other people and kill them. And there is no price to be paid.”

But a price would be paid—in blood. Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir instructed Zvi Zamir, the head of Mossad, to exact revenge, essentially giving an official order for “an eye for an eye.” He requested an official “James Bond” license to kill terrorists abroad. He got it. The movie Munich showed some of the action that followed.

Just weeks after the attack, Wael Zwaiter, a translator at the Libyan Embassy in Rome who doubled as a terrorist leader, became the first target. At the door to his apartment building, two men stepped from the shadows and asked, “Are you Wael Zwaiter?” Zwaiter answered in the affirmative, and the Mossad agents pumped twelve bullets into him.

In Israel, the widow who had flown to Munich got a call. The caller simply told her to watch the ten o'clock news, which carried news of the first assassination. After each assassination, mysterious callers reportedly informed each widow.

In Paris, Dr. Mahmoud Hamshari, the head of Black September in France, was next. When he answered his phone one day, it exploded.

Israeli agents killed PLO operatives across Europe one after another. Then came the most daring operation of all. Just seven months after the Olympic attacks, Israeli commandos slipped ashore near Beirut, Lebanon. Three pre-positioned cars awaited them. The leader, Ehud Barak, later to become Israeli Prime Minister, reportedly dressed as a woman to make the group appear to be a family on an outing. At the PLO apartment complex, Barak killed the guard. The commandos broke into the apartment of Kamal Adwan, the PLO's chief of operations, and pumped 55 bullets into him. They killed two other PLO leaders then returned to the beach. The entire operation took thirty minutes. It sent a message to the terrorists: You're not even safe in friendly territory.

By then, Mossad had killed eleven terrorists, but one man at the top of the Mossad hit list, Ali Hassan Salameh, a young protégé of Yasser Arafat and the planner of the Munich attack, was still free. Mossad tracked him to Lillehammer, Norway, coincidentally the future site of the 1994 winter Olympics. Agents pumped 14 bullets into the man who exactly matched Ali's description. Unfortunately, Mossad had committed its only blunder of the operation: They had killed an innocent Moroccan waiter.

Salameh escaped and was still free and living the good life in Beirut. Seven years after the Munich attacks, an English woman moved into an apartment overlooking the street near his apartment. She sat at the window every day and painted street scenes. One day, on the street below, Salameh passed by a car Mossad had packed with explosives. She gave a signal. He never knew what hit him.

CBS News asked the former head of Mossad what message Mossad wanted to send. “That we shall reach them,” replied Zamir. “And each one of them will be responsible for his own crime.”

When Ehud Barak was asked about the 9/11 attack on America, he replied: “What the hell is wrong about hitting someone who did not hesitate to use hijacked planes with 150 tons of fuel as a living cruise missile to kill 5,000 people?”

Bob Simon of CBS News noted: “The Israelis tracked down and killed the terrorists, and some of their friends as well. It was an eye for an eye. Now that President Bush has told the CIA to take its gloves off, the Israeli tactics have become an object lesson in Washington. The Israelis conducted the most daring assassination campaign of our time.”

In our first assassination, we killed six terrorists in Yemen with a missile from a drone. We seem to have stopped there. Let’s not stop with just a few assassinations. This is war. Those savages declared war on us and the rest of the civilized world. Let’s pull out the stops and go after every one of those barbarians that we can find. The more we kill, the safer we will be.

I hope you like what you've read and want to read more. And I hope that when you finish the book, you'll take some action to help reverse our slide down the slippery slope we're on.

God bless,

Allan C. Stover